Confessions of a Data Analyst

As most institutions have begun to plan their transition to CECL, a number of them are discovering first-hand the additional emphasis on data. Reporting under CECL is going to require banks to encompass not just more data fields but encompass more historical data to account for the life of a loan. Because of this significant shift in data utilization some data pitfalls are becoming more and more prevalent.

The Impact of CECL on Bank Financial Management . . . A Financial Crisis Retrospective

We are long overdue in exploring the potential impact of CECL on bank financial management. Beginning to think through how CECL will behave across the economic cycle should be a priority for us all. Larry Sorensen, CFO of Washington Trust Bank, will share a study conducted by his team at Washington Trust Bank. That study looked at the impact of reserving for life of loan expected credit losses on provision expense, the allowance position, earnings, capital and financial management during the Great Recession. Learn how they conducted the study, why they conducted the study, and the lessons learned.

9:15 a.m.	Don't You Forget About Me: The Impact of ASU 2016-13 on Debt Securities Under ASU 2016-13, credit loss measurement differs depending on the debt security's classification: held-to-maturity (HTM) or available-for-sale (AFS) based on management's investment intentions. HTM debt securities, will fall under the CECL model of the ASU. This may potentially require institutions to recognize at adoption and on an ongoing basis, credit losses on certain HTM debt securities which under current guidance would currently have no credit impairment. The session will provide the information needed to account for losses for debt securities under the new CECL standard.  with Gordon Dobner, BKD  John Griffin, BKD  Dale Sheller, The Baker Group	San Antonio Ballroom D-I
10:15 -10:30 a.m.	BREAK	San Antonio Ballroom Lobby
10:30 a.m.	The Importance of Analytically Informed CECL Decisions CECL is a principle-based standard that allows for a relatively high degree of flexibility in execution. There are a number of decisions that must be addressed, such as what reasonable and supportable forecast horizon to use, what reversion mechanism to apply, should a DCF or non-DCF method be utilized. In our experience, it is important to approach these questions from an analytical perspective to make more informed decisions. This session will explore several of these concepts in more detail and provide illustrative examples of unintended consequences that may not be fully appreciated if decisions are not informed by appropriate analytics. In addition, the session will share insights on lessons learned from IFRS 9 implementations to help companies better anticipate and mitigate implementation risks.  with Mike Shearer, PWC	San Antonio Ballroom D-I
11:30 a.m.	Quarter 2 of CECL: Will You Be Prepared to Explain Your Credit Loss Provision? This session will focus your attention on the information that may be needed after CECL has been adopted to explain subsequent credit loss provisions for the loan portfolio. In doing so, we hope you will be better prepared to make the needed disclosures and for that purpose have in mind the information that may need to be readily available from the ACL (Allowance for Credit Losses) system. It will also touch on the issue of measurement uncertainty as it applies to the ACL and how measurement uncertainty may affect the level of the ACL that lenders choose to carry.  with Dorsey Baskin, partner emeritus, Grant Thornton, Independent MST Advisor	San Antonio Ballroom D-I
12:20- 12:35 p.m.	Adjourn Conference with the Game Day Panel  Regan Camp and Chris Emery, MST	San Antonio Ballroom D-I
